David Frederick represents clients across a broad spectrum, principally in appellate courts. He has argued more than 100 appeals, including 48 in the Supreme Court. In the Supreme Court, he has represented individuals, workers, investors, immigrants, classes of consumers, farmers, Native Americans, small corporations, public-sector unions, trade associations, large companies, foreign governments, States (Alaska, Delaware, New Hampshire, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Vermont), the European Union, and the United States. David is the only advocate in private practice to have won or successfully settled cases in the Supreme Court the past twelve years in a row.

In the lower courts, among other clients, David has served as lead counsel for the National Credit Union Administration in its efforts to recover significant losses from Wall Street banks' sale of faulty mortgage-backed securities that caused five of the largest credit unions to fail in the Great Recession. To date, those efforts have resulted in the recovery of more than $3 billion to the NCUA.

David has been active philanthropically in numerous communities. He and his wife provide funding for eight scholarships at the University of Pittsburgh and at Oxford University, and seven public service internships at Pitt, Johns Hopkins, and University of Texas Law School. They also support a wide range of arts, health, environmental, and community service organizations in Washington, D.C., and San Antonio, Texas. They are actively working on three land conservation projects in Fairfax and Stafford Counties, Virginia. For nine years, David coached Little League baseball in McLean, Virginia.

A former law clerk to Justice Byron White and Judge Joseph Sneed, David graduated from the University of Texas School of Law (J.D., with honors); University of Oxford (University College) (D.Phil.), where he was a Rhodes Scholar; and University of Pittsburgh (B.A., summa cum laude), where he was a Truman Scholar. David served in the Department of Justice as Assistant to the Solicitor General (1996-2001) and as Counselor to the Inspector General (1995-1996). He is the author of three books: Supreme Court and Appellate Advocacy (West 2d ed. 2010, with a foreword by Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg); The Art of Oral Advocacy (West 2d ed. 2011); and Rugged Justice: The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals and the American West, 1891-1941 (UC Berkeley 1994, with a foreword by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor). Since 2001, David has been a partner at Kellogg, Huber, Hansen, Todd, Evans & Figel, P.L.L.C.
